Blind, Black and Blue

In the early 20 the Century, a generation of musicians redefined the life experience of black and of disabled Americans. Drawing on the indignities of slavery and segregation, these blind musicians earned a living playing on the streets, before taking their distinctive blues sound into the recording studio. Many of them became big stars. (BBC)

5:00 The World at Five

5:10 Heart and Soul

Canada's Search for a Papal Apology

For more than 100 years thousands of Canada's First Nations children, Metis and Inuit children were forcibly removed from their homes and sent to boarding schools run by the Catholic church's. Many were beaten, starved and sexually abused. They were forbidden from speaking their native languages and had their culture stripped from them. Thousands died, far away from their families. Canada's Truth and Reconciliation Commission has recommended that the Pope come to Canada to make an apology - similar to the one made to Irish victims of abuse. Prime Minister Justin Trudeau has also asked the Pope to do so. But Francis has simply said that he cannot 'personally respond'. (BBC)
